Yes, We're Open: Cuddle-at-home rental

Vol. 8 Issue 26
12/03/2012

Film review by Roy Rogers Oldenkamp, West Hollywood, California

"Yes, We're Open" is the amusing new film from director Richard Wong.

Available online, it's definitely worth a rental, especially if you are a fan of our great city to the north, San Francisco.

All the action takes place in the hipster community, and the film seems to qualify as a post-Asian film featuring a mostly Asian cast.

That cast can act, and the capable leads Luke (Parry Shen) and the highly capable Lynn Chen as Sylvia keep us going along with the farcical element of this bedroom comedy.

To underscore the infidelity theme and its impact on lives, a rental film they watch becomes a device throughout the film, a film within a film, The Devil Is In The Details.

Pre-code and candid, it functions as counterpoint and adds a glossy production value to this lower budgeted movie.

Supporting cast includes close friends of Luke and Sylvia, libertine couple Elena and Ronald, played by the dynamic Sheetal Sheth and Kerry McCrohan. Adventurers, they just want to shake up the protagonists by inserting infidelity into their lives, presumably just for kicks.

Luke, who doesn't take a whole lot of convincing, feels remorse and confusion simultaneously, and the movie unfolds with the attendant expected complications, punctuated by collaborating scenes from The Devil Is In The Details.

It might sound a tad confusing, yet it all flows along quite nicely, and conflicted Luke (we, too are conflicted about even whether we like Luke-he's the kind of fella who would mention fifty per cent of marriages end in divorce—during a wedding toast!) figures it all out in the end, 1930's style.

Production values show off a lovely side of San Francisco, and the captured light in scene after scene, whether interior or street-side or park-side, speak to cinematographer Seng Chen's talent.

Writer H.P. Mendoza keeps the plot tight and the story tighter, while the wit never lags throughout.

His latest film "I am A Ghost" is due out soon, but meanwhile we have "Yes, We're Open" as the perfect cuddle-at-home rental for those late fall nights.

Enjoy!
